

The organization

The Dutch Caribbean Nature Alliance (DCNA) is a regional network of protected areas founded by the nature parks of the Dutch Caribbean to assist them in safeguarding our unique natural resources for generations to come. On behalf of DCNA we are currently recruiting for the following position, situated on the island of Bonaire:

Conservation Project Assistant

The position

As conservation project assistant you assist the Executive Director with various projects, such as the save-our-shark project, general project development, project management, capacity building and communication. Out of the Bonaire office, for your work you will travel regularly to the parks on the six islands served by the DCNA organization. You maintain constant and close communication with all involved parties and stakeholders. You write reports about your achievements and you assist with general and administrative tasks in the DCNA office.

Your profile

You have at least a Bachelor of Science degree in Ecology, Environmental Science, Conservation Management, Tropical Ecology or Marine Biology. You preferably have some prior experience in organizations comparable to the DCNA organization. You have excellent communicational, organizational and writing skills. You have an excellent command of the English language and preferably also Dutch and/or Papiamentu. You are flexible when it comes to travel and working schedules.
